FIRST WARD

First Ward combines quiet, tree-lined neighborhood streets and proximity to great cultural and educational institutions. Once home to the publicly owned housing of Earle Village, the neighborhood's redevelopment began in 1997 when the Charlotte Housing Authority partnered with Bank of America to develop First Ward Place, one of the first HOPE VI mixed-income housing projects. Today, residential options in First Ward include new craftsman-style single family homes, contemporary townhouses, mid-rise apartments and high-rise condominiums. The new 4-acre First Ward Park opened in late 2015, across the street from ImaginOn Children's Theater and Library and the 7th Street Public Market. The neighborhood has both private and public k-12 education, the main branch of the Charlotte Mecklenburg public library and the Center City campus of UNC Charlotte. First Ward is set to see another phase of development beginning this year, as Levine Properties begins developing 24 acres between the Garden District and North Tryon Street. The Blue Line extension, which opened in 2018, doubles the length of the light rail line and includes a new station in First Ward at 9th Street.

It endured a period of decline until the 1970s, when the Junior League partnered with Bank of America to begin revitalizing the neighborhood home by home. Today, residents value the combination of neighborhood feel and proximity to all of Uptown's dining, cultural and employment offerings. Every December for more than 35 years, the neighborhood has organized its annual Holiday Home Tour, showcasing both its historic Victorians and modern high-rise condominiums. With the new SkyHouse towers rising this year, Fourth Ward will soon welcome new neighbors and retail.
